Mandela awarded U.S. gold medal

praises S. African anti-apartheid work

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Surrounded by the Capitol rotunda's towering statues of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, retiring South African President Nelson Mandela received the Congressional Gold Medal, the first African to be honored by the United States' highest civilian award.

The 80-year-old hero of the long struggle against apartheid said he felt "like the heavyweight champion of the world" but he said, South Africa cannot be governed by prizes alone.

"We are long past the blame game for our problems, it is time we acknowledge that the injustice and inequities imposed on us by the history of South Africa are beyond our capacity to meet on our own. We need a partnership of Africa and the United States, developing and industrialized countries bringing about a new set of resources," said Mandela, who is stepping down next year.

President Clinton followed a long line of lawmakers, including House Speaker Newt Gingrich, who urged Americans to follow Mandela's example of humility, sacrifice and kindness in the face of enmity.

"No medal, no award, no fortune, nothing we could give him could possibly compare to the gifts he has given to us and to the world," Clinton said before presenting the round gold medal nestled in a green velvet case.

Legislation awarding the medal, which was approved by Congress on July 29, cited Mandela for having "dedicated his entire life to the abolition of apartheid ... and sacrificed his own personal freedom for the good of everyone."

At a news briefing after the ceremony, Mandela praised Clinton's efforts to improve race relations in the United States and bring in blacks, minority groups and the disabled into government institutions.

"That alone is a very good indication raising the possibility that in due course we may have a black president" in the United States, said Mandela.

Mandela served 27 years in prison before his release in 1990 and subsequent election as president. Today, he became the 100th recipient of the congressional medal, which was first awarded to Washington in 1776 and since bestowed on the likes of Lincoln, Winston Churchill and Mother Theresa.

Famous family asks for help

The family named for their involvement in the Civil Rights Movement, is asking for children's books to help

The Brown Family, of the civil rights case Brown vs. the Board of Education, asked BYU students to help with the development of a literacy center for low-income residents in

The Brown Foundation is an organization giving educational community. The organization's children's books aimed at children 4 to 12 years old.

The Brown Foundation was founded by the family following the Topeka Board of Education Case in 1954. The case began when Oliver Brown sought admittance for his daughter, Linda Brown, to an all-white school in Topeka, Kan. where she was denied entrance because of her color.

Please see related story on page 5

"This case opened the door and made it possible to create racial equality in schools today," said Scott Ferrin, assistant professor of Educational Leadership and Foundations.

However, Ferrin is concerned that schools are not as well integrated today as they should be.

Ferrin had a conference call with Linda Brown's son, Charles Smith, on Monday for an audience of graduate students studying the political aspects of education.

During the call, Smith told students of his conversion to the LDS Church in 1992 and how it has changed his life.

"I was prepared for the gospel three years before I even met the missionaries through a lot of adversity and humility in my life," Smith said.

Smith's wife, Sherrita, was the one who introduced him to the gospel in 1990. In 1994 Smith and his wife were able to do the temple work for Oliver Brown in the Salt Lake Temple.

"It was a beautiful, spiritual, experience for me; I was overwhelmed. I felt like everything came to a completion, and it was something that had to be done," Smith said.

Linda Brown is not a member of the LDS Church but was enthusiastic about the temple work being done for her husband.

Smith also talked about the importance of students getting involved with the Brown Foundation.

"It is very important that the school get involved because it is a known organization and because of what the Foundation stands for: truth. I believe that BYU is a part of that truth, with the gospel, and it would be a good resource for us to work with," Smith said. "The Brown Foundation is our way of giving back to the community and being able to support education."

If students would like to donate to the Brown Foundation they can mail children's books to The Brown Foundation, PO Box 4862, Topeka, Kansas, 66004.

Drew Miller, no. 12, steps back to pass, as Ronney Jenkins, no. 16, sets himself in motion. Miller has decided to stay at BYU as the back-up quarterback to Kevin Feterik.

Miller decides to stay

By MICHAEL MILLER

NewsNet Sports Writer

After meeting with head coach LaVell Edwards Wednesday, back-up quarterback Drew Miller has decided to stay at BYU despite reports that he was leaving.

"Drew is a fine young man and after speaking with him, we are happy he's decided to stay with the program," Edwards said.

Miller still remained silent about the whole matter, however. He refused to talk to reporters on the way to practice Wednesday and when questioned after Tuesday's practice if he would abandon his sophomore season at BYU Miller said, "No comment."

Miller's father, Dave, called Edwards on Wednesday, and the two had a "nice visit" according to the BYU head coach.

"Drew's parents are very desirous for him staying," Edwards said.

The quarterback controversy erupted after Miller had hoped he would see action in the Washington game in his home state and did not. Miller requested 39 tickets for the game against the Huskies for family members and friends and thought he could have helped the Cougars' cause.

"Drew was very upset after the loss," his father said.

The frustration grew when Miller stayed behind for an extra day in his hometown of Lakewood, Wash., and talked about his role at BYU with his parents.

BYU is 2-5 in Kevin Feterik's last seven starts and a Cougar quarterback has not thrown for 300 yards since last October's win over Utah State.

Miller has played in one game this year, completing a pass for no gain to Kevin Feterik on a trick play against Arizona State. Last season, after Feterik was injured, Miller saw playing time in four games.

Against Rice, Miller entered the game late in the fourth quarter and was sacked for a safety on his first college play.

In his home debut a week later versus Hawaii, Miller completed 3-of-7 passes for 23 yards and one interception.

Miller's most productive game last season was against the Texas Christian Horned Frogs. He finished with 180 yards and three touchdown passes.

Miller's final game of 1997 was against UTEP. In that contest, Miller was 17-of-32 for 226 yards and three interceptions.

For the 1997 season, Miller connected on 37-of-67 passes for 430 yards. He threw three touchdowns and four interceptions.

Along with BYU, Miller was recruited by Notre Dame, Stanford, Texas, Arizona State, Washington State, Southern Methodist, San Diego State, UCLA, Idaho State, Ohio State, Northwestern and Tennessee.

Three days before the scheduled Saturday opening of Foxwood Apartments, hardware and appliances remained uninstalled, plaster and carpet remnants littered the floors and the concrete for the front stoop had just been poured.

Despite the work that remains on the buildings, officers of Metler Bros. Construction Company said the apartments will be finished on time, if it requires construction crews to work through the night. If Provo City building inspectors approve the premises Friday, female tenants will be able to move in Saturday morning.

After four weeks of living in Provo's Travelodge and Regency hotels, 30 female students are looking forward to having a place to call home.

Political parties plan to meet constituents

By VANESSA GENETTI-SCOTT

As election time nears, local politicians are making sure residents have the chance to meet and question candidates before the Nov. 3 ballot.

The Utah County Democrats are starting off with their annual dinner tonight at the United Steelworkers Union, 1847 S. Columbia Ln., Orem. The dinner is from 6-8 p.m. and costs $7 per person or Democratic candidates vying for county offices will make short introductions and will be available for questions from residents before and after the dinner.

Bob Davis, chair of the Utah County Democrats, said having the dinner so early is a tradition. In addition to meeting candidates, Salt Lake County Commissioner Randy Horiuchi will be the keynote speaker.

Davis said anyone is welcome to attend the dinner.

"It's is not really a political thing. It's more for comradery," Davis said.

Because Utah County covers such a large area, the Utah County Republicans have opted to support individual cottage meetings instead of one large meeting featuring all candidates.

"Where we have candidates from all over the valley, we felt it was better to have candidates hold individual meetings in their respected districts. That way we don't have someone driving all the way from Santaquin to Orem to meet the candidate from their district," said Rod Fudge, chairman of the Utah County Republicans.

However, Utah County residents can question all the republican candidates at the Utah County Republican Women's "Meet the Candidates" reception Oct. 24. The reception begins at 5 p.m. at the Utah Valley State College ballroom, 1200 S. 800 W.

Barbara Packard, president of the Utah County Republican Women, said the reception will be an informal situation where residents can ask questions to the candidates.

The Republican Women will be hosting their annual scholarship fundraiser banquet, "Vision of America," following the reception.

The banquet will feature speeches by U.S. Senators Orrin Hatch and Bob Bennett, as well as U.S. Rep. Chris Cannon. It will begin at 6:30 p.m. and costs $18.

Gore promotes HMO 'bill of rights'

DEARBORN, Mich. — Vice President Al Gore went to Dearborn, Mich., Wednesday to promote what was to be the major theme for Democrats this fall — a "bill of rights" for HMO patients.

At a forum with medical professionals and people who have had trouble getting medical bills paid for by their HMOs, Gore said the Democratic bill in the U.S. Senate offers more protection than an alternative Republican bill.

A doctor told Gore about resuscitating a man who was in cardiac arrest, only to have the HMO declare the treatment "not medically necessary." The patient lived.

The vice president told reporters traveling with him that he had seen parts of Clinton's videotaped testimony, and his "overall impression was that it was much ado about not much new," the New York Times reported.

Gore also said the Starr report "does not serve as a basis for impeachment."

5-year-old carries gun to school

TOPEKA, Kan. — A 9 mm pistol taken to school by a 5-year-old discharged inside the youngster's book bag in a classroom. No one was injured.

Stauffer said about 20 children were in the kindergarten classroom at Quincy Elementary School when the gun went off Tuesday.

Authorities would not identify the boy, but said he was released to his mother after questioning.

"Initially the child was very upset and crying," said school security chief Jim Gilchrist. "It scared him more than anything."

The gun apparently fired when the child brushed his bag with a mat as the children prepared for rest time, said Quincy Principal Scott Hensen.

Because of state and federal laws, the boy will be expelled for 186 days, Gilchrist said.

When authorities identify the last adult who had control of the gun, prosecutors will be asked to file charges, he said.

Councilman wins job in drawing

MURRAY — It was the luck of the draw that put former City Councilman Lynn Turner back in his old seat.

Turner regained his spot on the council in a drawing held Monday night by other council members because they could not muster a three-vote majority for Turner or Bob Carter, the other candidate.

Turner was immediately sworn in for a position that had been held by John Ward, a write-in candidate who defeated him last November. Ward resigned last month for personal reasons.

Twice on Monday night, the council voted 2-1 for Turner, with one abstention. The Utah Code, which requires three votes for such an appointment, says that in the event of a deadlock "the vacancy shall be filled by lot" — which Murray officials defined as a coin toss or drawing.

"They both sounded silly to me for a job that important," Turner said Tuesday, but he was happy to accept the result of a salad-bowl paper draw.

"While I was disappointed I didn't get selected, Mr. Turner will do a good job and I may run next fall," Carter said.

Salvation Army receives millions

SAN DIEGO — McDonald's heiress Joan Kroc donated $80 million Wednesday to The Salvation Army, the largest single donation to the agency in its 118-year history.

The money will be used for a community center named after Kroc and her late husband, Ray, who co-founded the fast-food hamburger chain.

Kroc said she remembered how her husband used to dress up as Santa Claus during the holidays and ring the bell for Salvation Army donations on the downtown streets of San Diego.

"Right now, I bet there's a lot of bell ringing going on with Ray leading the chorus," she said.

Major Donald C. Bell, division commander for The Salvation Army, said the agency was "deeply moved and inspired by Kroc's generosity and caring."

"Our vision for stronger families and revitalized neighborhoods will now become a reality for our community," he said.

The gift also includes 12 acres of land for the community center in San Diego.

Baby exhumed for more DNA tes

By MELINDA SEMADENI

A second set of DNA tests will be performed on a baby that was exhumed from the American Fork cemetery Wednesday in an effort to close an investigation and avoid an impending lawsuit.

Janet Johnson from American Fork delivered a stillborn baby at Cottonwood Hospital 23 years ago. The infant was buried in the American Fork cemetery. Based on the results of a 5-year-old DNA test, however, she said the baby exhumed from her child's grave does not belong to her.

Detective Alex Huggert of the Murray police will accompany the baby to the DNA Lab Core in Washington, D.C.

Lt. Gerry Christenson, who is directing the investigation for the Murray Police Department, said detectives were satisfied with the first set of DNA tests, but a second round of DNA tests will ensure that it was done properly the first time. Christenson said there are still questions, however.

"If that's not her baby, where's her baby, and who's the mother of this baby? We still don't have the answers," Christenson said.

Johnson didn't question the details of her delivery for 18 years. But five years ago, while watching an episode of "Oprah" about switched babies, she recalled the peculiarities of her delivery and information on the death certificate. Johnson instigated an investigation that resulted in the first set of DNA tes of difficult," said DeAnna Williams, 21, a senior from Lenoir, N.C., majoring in English. Williams was one of 30 students to spend the past month in Travelodge rooms while awaiting the completion of permanent housing.

Jeff Metler, chief advertising and marketing officer at Metler Bros. Construction, said the twin buildings at Foxwood were originally slated for occupancy at the start of Fall Semester, but construction was held up from February to March by wet weather.

The company began working with BYU off-campus housing officials in July when it became apparent that the weather delays had put them intractably behind schedule.

Tenants for the men's building were contacted by letter in July; the women found out in early August that their apartments would not be finished.

The students had three options: they could cancel the contract with a full refund, find temporary housing and accept a refund for the months in which they were not paying rent, or move into temporary housing provided by Metler Construction.

Tim Metler, president of Metler Bros. Construction, said most students decided to keep their contracts. Some made arrangements to live with relatives or friends, but most moved into housing that the company located: the women into local hotels and the men into basement apartments and houses in the area.

Construction on the buildings has also roused local ire. Peter Larson, whose blue frame house at 41 W. 880 East is now dwarfed by the complex that surrounds it on both sides and in back, has been fighting the building project every step of the way.

Larson said the construction crews have destroyed the root systems of several 40-year-old maple trees on his property perimeter, encroached 1.5 feet onto his grounds and caused him undue distress with noise, clutter and traffic. Since June he has peppered his front yard with signs detailing his grievances. As yet, he has not sought legal representation or reimbursement for damages.

al Security number is over Doug Dubitsky, student body president at the University of Utah.

Professors, financial aid staff and traffic offices at the University of Utah all have access to social security numbers, Dubitsky said.

State and federal laws require Social Security numbers on employment and financial aid applications.

BYU is no exception.

BYU students must also provide their Social Security numbers to the university. These numbers double as a student's identification number on check payments, applications for scholarships, parking registration and student identification cards.

Dubitsky said his concern stemmed from the recent incident of stolen social security numbers and credit card fraud at the University of Utah.

In April, 23,000 social security numbers were thought to have been accessed from the University of Utah computer file by a hacker. The stolen Social Security numbers allowed the hacker to obtain students' phone numbers, e-mail account numbers and other personal information, according to the Deseret News.

> "The social security issue is a big emerging school issue."

> — Brian Bowers, BYUSA president

Though only three students reported fraudulent attempts to apply for credit cards using their social security numbers, University of Utah officials advised students to call the nation's top-three credit bureaus and ask for a fraud alert tag to be placed on their accounts.

"There are too many unprofessional people with access to those numbers," Dubitsky said.

The council also raised concerns over lack of funding for students from middle-class income families and the lack of adequate and modern technology for students.

The student body presidents agreed that only around 25 percent of students has access to computers not owned by the university. When Gov. Leavitt polled the room to see if the figure was accurate, the figure held true.

In addition the presidents expressed gratitude for the Utah Library Consortium and asked that it be continued and funding for the program increased if possible.

ah wary of infection

By ANGELA HOWELL
angela@du2.byu.edu

Utah is facing an outbreak of the bacterial infection known as whooping cough.

"(In) the state of Utah, there has been 50 reported cases within the last couple of months," said Dr. Eugene Zanolli, emergency room physician at Columbia Timpanogos Regional Hospital.

Whooping cough is a bacterial infection of the upper airways. It is characterized by a loud cough that sounds kind of like a "whoop" and has a very distinct sound.

Zanolli said the disease mostly affects children, but adults can be affected as well.

Symptoms include a high fever, difficulty breathing and swallowing, a bad cold that is not improving, irritability and a prolonged loud and hoarse cough, Zanolli said.

Todd Cope, a registered nurse at Columbia Timpanogos Regional Hospital, said that whooping cough is the common name, but it's actually (called) pertussis.

Cope said the disease is very contagious and can be contracted through direct contact.

"Your very young children are those that are in most danger. The older they get, the more resistance they have."

Zanolli said the vaccination can be very effective in preventing the disease, and unvaccinated children are the most susceptible.

"The disease could have been or could be wiped out if parents would take the time to immunize," Cope said.

Zanolli said if whooping cough is treated early enough it can be cured with antibiotics. However, if the disease goes untreated it can cause death very suddenly in some cases.

Cope said children are more affected by the disease because their respiratory system is not fully developed. He said adults are "not going to experience the disease itself because (they) have a big enough immune system and their respiratory system is strong enough to handle it."

Greenspan repeated remarks he made in September that the increasing risks to the U.S. economy had prompted the Fed in August to change its policy directive from one leaning toward increasing interest rates to fight inflation to a neutral stance.

And since that time, Greenspan said, "Deteriorating foreign economies and their spillover to domestic markets have increased the possibility that the slowdown in growth of the American economy will be more than sufficient to hold inflation in check."

In his Sept. 4 speech at the University of California at Berkeley, Greenspan said: "It is not credible that the United States can remain an oasis of prosperity unaffected by a world that is experiencing greatly increased stress."

Those comments and the promise they offered of rate cuts down the road were enough to boost the Dow Jones industrial average by 381 points, its biggest one-day point gain ever.

But last week, Greenspan sent markets in the opposite direction when in an appearance before the House Banking Committee he deflated expectations of coordinated interest rate cuts among the world's seven largest economies. His comments sent the Dow plunging the next day by 216 points following huge drops in Tokyo and other overseas markets because of disappointment that the Fed would not soon act.

Lower U.S. interest rates would help a number of countries struggling to defend their currencies by lowering the value of the U.S. dollar on global markets. The lower U.S. rates would also bolster global confidence by assuring foreign businesses that the Fed stood ready to insure that U.S. growth would continue to serve as an economic engine for the rest of the world.

Whooping cough is back

Whooping cough once caused 12,000 deaths per year in the United States before an immunization called the DPT reduced the amount of deaths to 10 worldwide, according to the Mayo Clinic.

Whooping cough, or pertussis, is a highly contagious disease that occurs in the respiratory system. Although the disease doesn't claim as many lives as it once did, the number of people contracting whooping cough is on the rise again. In Utah alone there are more than 50 cases, said Utah health officials. Why the sudden outbreak?

Some blame the epidemic on the polygamists. Utah health officials believe the pertussis outbreak started with two cases in the polygamist town of Hilldale and may have spread when visitors from Utah Valley joined in the city's Pioneer Day celebration.

While the polygamists may have been a springboard for the whooping cough infection, they are not the sole reason for the outbreak. We believe the increasing number of cases involving pertussis is due to the disease not getting the proper attention it deserves.

One of the main reasons for the rise in the number of cases is because the DPT immunizations are not lasting through adulthood. Sure, the DPT vaccine is given to children in a series of shots before the age of 6 and should prevent whopping cough from ever developing, but the immunization doesn't always last.

Adults who were vaccinated as children can become infected later in life, said Dr. Wendy Keitel, an assistant professor of microbiology and immunology at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston. If the vaccine wears off, there isn't any immunization available for adults to prevent the disease from occurring. Adults can then be significantly at risk of getting pertussis.

Now is the time for researchers to step up to the plate and take on the problem, before the disease takes control. Prevention is the key. If experimenters can find an adult vaccine for whooping cough, they will be taking care of a problem rather than searching for its remedies.

Another reason for the increase is because pertussis is often misdiagnosed. The adult symptoms of pertussis are more mild than when a child is infected and are often mistaken for the common cold or bronchitis.

The disease is also hard to detect. Medical studies report that "25 percent of adults with chronic cough of at least several weeks [duration] may in fact have pertussis infection," according to Medical Tribune News Service. People overlook whooping cough and don't appreciate it as an illness.

We need to be aware of the disease. If we think we are starting to come down with a cold, we need to pay a visit to the doctor's office. As patients, we ought to suggest the possibility that the sickness could be pertussis. A doctor can prescribe antibiotics which can be taken to prevent spreading the disease to others.

Something needs to be done to stop the spread of whooping cough. Researchers need to recognize whooping cough as a serious problem and find a vaccine for adults in order to wipe out the disease.

Until then, we as individuals can help out by not passing the disease on to others. If we are sick we should go to the doctors and do something about it, rather than contaminating everyone else with our germs. Not every cough or sniffle is the common cold.

Recognize the whooping cough for what it is — a serious disease that once took the lives of thousands. It is everyone's responsibility to bring pertussis to a halt. Rather than blaming the polygamists, it is time for us to take responsibility and prevent the spread of whooping cough.

Supplement use explored

As Roger Maris' home run record fell victim to the forearms and biceps of the St. Louis Cardinals' Mark McGwire this summer, the Food and Drug Administration took a swing of its own.

Only the FDA was not swinging for the fences. Instead, it was targeting the muscle-building supplement creatine, one of two supplements taken by McGwire during the last year.

It is also the drug used by three college wrestlers who died this year. Two other wrestlers suffered serious seizures, events the FDA is investigating, USA Today reported.

"Much remains unknown about whether creatine is absolutely safe for long-term use at levels currently being recommended," the FDA said in the statement in USA Today.

McGwire also uses Androstenedione, a testosterone-producing strength enhancer that is legal in baseball but banned by the NFL, Olympics and NCAA. Androstenedione has the ability to raise testosterone levels which build lean muscle mass and promote recovery after injury.

"Everything I've done is natural," McGwire said in an Associated Press article. "Everybody that I know in the game of baseball uses the same stuff I use."

The difference between dietary supplements and prescription drugs or over-the-counter medications is manufacturers do not have to prove supplements safe or effective before selling them.

A USA Today survey recently showed 85 percent of the Association of Professional Team Physicians would not recommend creatine until more research is done on its health effects.

Chuck Stiggins, BYU's head strength and conditioning coach, said players use creatine during the season, but the WAC prohibits it in the offseason.

BYU's first football game this season — Sept. 5 at Alabama — was marred by player after player from both teams being escorted off the field with leg cramps. Cramping is an alleged side effect of creatine use.

BYU sophomore running back Ronney Jenkins missed the entire second half because of the severe cramping he experienced. Alabama quarterback John David Phillips missed much of the third quarter with cramping in his hand and arm.

Coincidence? Maybe. Concern? There should be.

Stiggins said creatine had nothing to do with the cramping problems BYU experienced. He said BYU was not on creatine at the time of the game.

Steve Martin, Alabama's assistant strength coach, said creatine is only part of off-season and early summer workouts. He said none of Alabama's players, that he knew of, were using creatine at the time of the game.

"I would bet most schools don't use it during the season," Martin said. "The only studies that have been done are for the short term, and for the short term it appears safe.

"But for the long term we don't know much about it. Someone will need to do some longitudinal studies down the road."

Martin said he would attribute the cramping to the humidity at game time and the nerves of an opening game. However, while the humidity might explain BYU's difficulties, doesn't Alabama practice in those same conditions on a daily basis?

The University of Tennessee is one school which has decided to limit the use of creatine, the AP has reported. Tennessee players experienced an unusually high number of cramping problems in its season opener Sept. 5 at Syracuse. In fact, 14 players experienced cramps, the majority creatine users.

Tennessee coach Phillip Fulmer told the AP the heat inside Syracuse's Carrier Dome contributed to the problems, but he also believed Creatine was a contributor. Tennessee will only regulate usage through the remaining warm months. After that, it appears Tennessee will start using creatine again.

Stiggins said problems can arise when any substance is used in excess. He said the media is looking for answers to the cramping problems in the wrong place.

"When people use it correctly, there are no problems," Stiggins said.

BYU head athletic trainer George Curtis said BYU started using creatine for three reasons: first, BYU was comfortable it was safe for its athletes; second, trainers were confident it would help an athlete's performance; and third, BYU wanted to stay competitive with other high-profile programs.

Unfortunately, to remain competitive with the other athletic programs, BYU was almost forced to jump into sport supplement training. But the question remains, is it right for BYU, or any other school, to subject athletes to these enhancers without any long-term research proving them to be completely safe?

Athletic directors, coaches and fans may have a hard time responding to that question.

Lay off the president

Dear Editor:

I have become weary of professors making derogatory remarks directed toward President Clinton during the past two weeks. I would have no problem if an open conversation of the subject were proposed, but snide comments in the middle of a lesson are uncalled for.

The D&C teaches us to publicly respect leaders of our country, even if we have other opinions. Slander can be no worse than gossip or lies. Opinions such as "The country would be better off if he resigned," or "He should be allowed to finish the not-so-bad job that he has done" are appropriate, but calling names to make a class laugh is not. Surprisingly, this is occurring in many of my classes and I do not appreciate it.

Make signs less silly

Dear Editor,

It's only the third football game of the season and I'm already sick of those stupid signs which are inserted in the your fine paper every couple days. This week's sign says "Run over the Racers."

Who are the Racers? Do we want to run over them? If they are the enemy this week in the football game, then yes, let's kill them. But I have one suggestion.

Instead of being cutesy with our free signs with slogans like "Run over the Racers,"let's express our true feelings.

How's "Kick the crap out of the Racers?" That's what we want our team to do, so why not express it? That should save whoever comes up with the silly slogans some valuable time each week.

Maybe then we won't have to see a sign like "Put a leash on the Bulldogs" next week when we play Fresno State.

DVDs are everywhere

Dear Editor,

I was pleased and surprised to see the article on the new DVD format in the Sept. 16 paper. Knowing something about the format, I found it informative, as I have been waiting for some time to see if Blockbuster would rent titles. However, I feel that some businesses here in the Provo/Orem area which rent and sell DVDs were inadvertently left out of the article.

Blockbuster is not the only video store in town, nor is it the only place that has stated it would like to provide DVD. Both Cougar Video and Scene One Video rent DVDs as well as players. Hollywood Video has been testing DVD rentals in areas in California and Virginia, with hopes of a nationwide roll-out around Christmas.

Suncoast, Sam Goody and Musicland — all in the University Mall — sell DVD software, as does Media Play. RC Willey and other furniture and electronics stores sell the hardware and a small selection of titles, and both Target and Walmart have begun selling the hardware and titles within the last month. And that doesn't even mention the number of DVD-ROMs included on recent computer models.

It is inaccurate to report that an hour drive is the only way to experience DVD in Utah County, when there are two video stores in Provo that already provide DVD software and player rental, as well as several stores which sell the equipment.

It is an exciting new format, with many benefits (such as options between pan and scan and widescreen, behind the scenes information, deleted scenes and director's commentaries).

It is quite popular, and its success can only continue to grow.

Clinton's acts a threat

Dear Editor:

I disagree with Professor Byron Daynes' assessment of the Clinton-Lewinsky matter. In the Sept. 17 issue of The Daily Universe, Daynes wrote, "In Nixon's case, there was a most serious threat to the political system and to individual privacy that is absent in the Clinton case."

I do not know what Daynes considers to be a "serious threat," but I cannot think of any threat more serious to the political system than what Bill Clinton has done.

Through his tactics of deceit and delay, Clinton has not only destroyed his own credibility, he has infected the electorate with a most pernicious notion — that honesty, integrity and morality are of no importance in a leader; so long as there is a chicken in every pot all is well. Such an attitude can only lead to greater corruption in American politics.

As for individual privacy, has Daynes so soon forgotten the fiasco involving the improper use of FBI files by the White House? Or what of the so-called "scorched earth" campaign that the administration seems to be conducting against its political enemies? Perhaps these are among the reasons that Sen. Robert Byrd, a liberal Democrat, took to the Senate floor to lament that "Many of the mistakes that Nixon made are being made all over again."

We can only hope that the crisis will end in the same way the Watergate scandal did 24 years ago — resignation.

Coverage lacking

Dear Editor,

Friday, the U.S. Senate failed to overturn the president's veto of a ban of "partial birth" abortions. Why was this news item not dealt with in The Daily Universe? This issue should not be ignored.

Our political leaders should be held accountable, but we cannot hold them accountable unless we are informed as to their actions.

You have a responsibility to inform us that should not be taken lightly.

Big-hair guy OK

Dear Editor:

I would just like to register a note of protest for what I would hope is the "silent majority" here at BYU.

Unlike Eric Snider, I think the big-haired guy at Scene One Video is pretty cool.

I love that guy. He's the reason I go. Sadly, my own hair is fading faster than my hopes for a timely graduation. But this man is a reminder to me and all my balding brothers that there are those who win this war we all must wage.

Conference to teach equality

By JAY HOWSER
jay@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Increasing public awareness of issues facing Down syndrome children is the goal of a Utah Down Syndrome Foundation (UDSF) conference Friday and Saturday in the Wilkinson Center.

The conference, sponsored by the BYU Department of Family Science, will feature classes and workshops which deal with a wide variety of topics, said Tericia Fitzgerald, UDSF President.

"Basically this conference is an education for everybody who comes," she said. "I hope people will walk away with a new vision of the future."

"We've focused so much on disability in the past, but we need to focus on ability," said Roz Welch, UDSF secretary.

Twelve speakers will discuss various educational, medical, social and legal issues, Fitzgerald said.

There is also a class that gives information to parents with newborns diagnosed with Down syndrome. This subject is a major emphasis of the UDSF, Welch said.

"Parents don't know what to be prepared for; we try to tell them it'll be okay," Welch said.

Terrance Olson, of the BYU School of Family Life, will be a keynote speaker at the conference. His remarks, entitled "Human and Humane," will address how Down syndrome children are treated by society.

"If you're a human being you have more in common with other human beings than you have differences," he said.

Fitzgerald said that one of the new additions to the conference is the focus on the siblings of those with Down syndrome.

"Brothers and sisters sometimes are the ones who take responsibility for them, and they also see a lot of unkindness from others that Down syndrome people don't catch," she said. "Sometimes the siblings get the hard end of the stick."

Tuition for parents and professionals is $15 per person, $25 per couple or $40 for a family or group of four. For young adults ages 14 and older, tuition is $10.

Jake Ball, who runs Soap Box, said the issue with Clinton is a national and personal concern.

"Soap Box is one way to break the chains of apathy," said Ball, 22, a junior from Boise, Idaho, majoring in international finance.

One Soap Box participant told students that voting is the best way to make an impact.

"Don't just register to vote, but actually vote," said Kevin Rees, 22, a junior from Virginia, majoring in accounting.

"We had our voice when we elected our leaders. We should let this issue go to Congress. It's their responsibility, not ours," said Todd Lassig, 26, a senior from Fountain Valley, Calif., majoring in broadcasting.

Michael Beadner, 21, a sophomore from Burke, Va., majoring in chemical engineering, said he saw hypocrisy in the Clinton investigation.

"There should not only be a call for morality in politics, but for the rest of America, as well," he said.

Energy is being directed toward Clinton, but there's no energy going toward increasing morality in other organizations, like the media, Beadner said.

Brent White, 22, a freshman from Denver, majoring in international law and diplomacy, said the most important thing is to uphold the U.S. Constitution.

"The President needs to stay where he is to preserve the United States. If Congress impeaches Clinton over this issue, the balance of powers will be disrupted and Congress will stand to direct the country instead of the president," White said.

Kriti Agarwal, 21, a junior from India, majoring in business management, said there are better things on which to be focused.

"If it were my country, or any other, they'd move on," Agarwal said.

Angela Smith, 18, a freshman from Logan with an open major said, "Elder Scott said we should leave the subject alone, so we should leave it alone."

Soap Box is on Wednesdays at 11 a.m. at the Checkerboard Quad. Ball said foul language is not allowed and students may not speak directly against the LDS Church authorities or its doctrine.

BYU engineers win prize

By ROB HERTZLER
rob@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

BYU engineering students received national awards at last week's American Society of Mechanical Engineers Conference in Atlanta.

Students Gregory Dibb, Clark Johns, Justin Jorgensen and Jason Westmoreland and graduates James Sampson and Jed Taylor received the grand prize of $6,000 in the Fifth Annual Padnos Design Competition.

Their design of the VapoRT high vacuum petroleum remediation trailer was designed as the team's senior Capstone project.

The team, coached by Dr. Predrag Radulovic, a professor of mechanical engineering, designed the portable trailer for Santa Fe Pacific Pipelines, now Kinder Morgan Energy Partners.

The environmentally-minded company, represented throughout the project by liaison engineer Scott Kilkenny, pipes petroleum throughout the United States and wanted a better solution to fixing the problem of occasional leaks from the pipes to underground water wells.

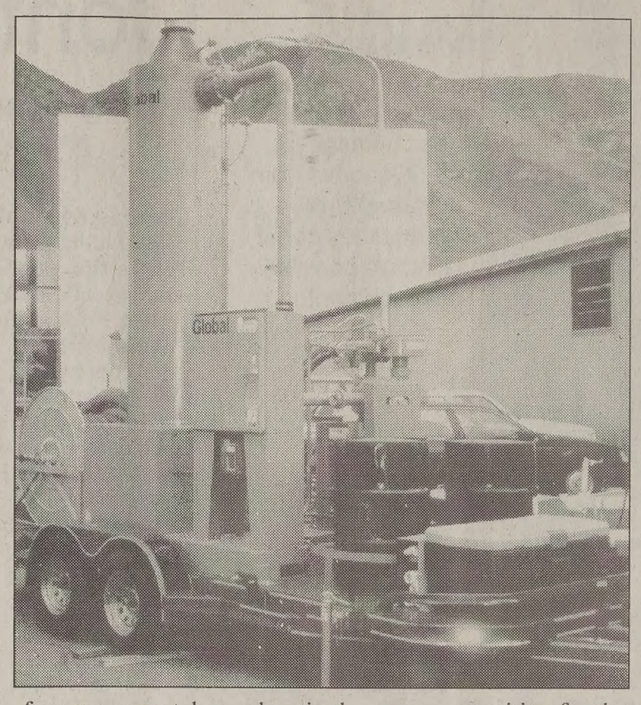
Dibb, 24, from Atlanta, majoring in manufacturing engineering, described how the trailer works.

"The stinger pipe goes down deep in the well. It sucks the gas with a vacuum and either burns or filters the gas," Dibb said.

This is the second consecutive year that BYU has received the grand prize in the Padnos Design Competition.

Radulovic was pleased with the recognition BYU received in what he said is one of mechanical engineering's most prestigious design conferences.

Students also receiving awards at the conference were Greg Roach and Scott Lyon, who received first place in the ASME Student Mechanism Design Competition for their improved design of a one-way ratchet and pawl clutch.



The award-winning VapoRT high vacuum petroleum remediation trailer pictured here was designed by a team of BYU mechanical engineers. It received the grand prize in a national competition last week.

Brian Jensen was awarded third place in the same competition for the design and fabrication of a bistable micro-mechanism.

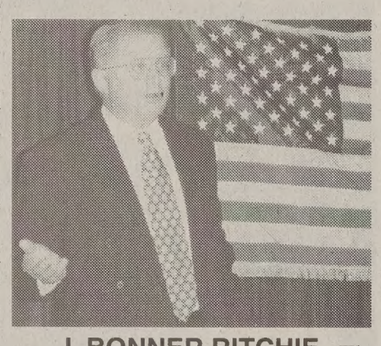
Middle East peacemaking possible, says professor

By CHRISTINE RAPPLEYE
christine@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

J. Bonner Ritchie said that peace in the Middle East is inevitable during the International Forum Series Wednesday sponsored by the David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies.

Ritchie spoke of his experiences and observations of Palestine while he taught at the Universtiy of Jordon. Ritchie is a professor of organizational ethics at the Romney Institute of Public Management of the Marriott School of Management.

Ritchie's speech, entitled "Middle East Peace: Will it Ever Happen?" was delivered to an overflowing audience in the Herald R. Clark Building.



J. BONNER RITCHIE

"I argue that peace is inevitable in the long run," Ritchie said.

Children eight years ago drew pictures depicting violence and hatred. Now, children draw pictures of sadness, rather than violence, Ritchie said.

"Peace for children. That's why I'm there (in Palestine). I'm on a cause. I care deeply about the children," Ritchie said. "I see a lot of hope. I see a lot of dreams. The Palestinian culture is subtle and powerful," Ritchie said.

Their world is incredibly uncertain. You cannot plan or predict anything that will happen, Ritchie said.

"The family has remained the most important institution to create dignity and respect in children," Ritchie said.

There are three perspectives that inhibit the peace process in Palestine, Ritchie said.

First, is the internal dealings of the organizations.

"There is much more happening internally than externally," Ritchie said.

Second, there is not any internal management process in Palestinian authority. There is not any history of internal management of the government or of civic or set practices.

Mismanagement and criticism of the government have serious implications, Ritchie said.

Lastly, there is no democracy. Most people have a dream of democracy. Their dream is to be able to vote and go where they want to go, Ritchie said.

Rana Elfarra, 28, from Gaza, is a graduate student in molecular biology, said "It is our duty to spread this message (about the Middle East.)"

"I'm glad someone could explain it so well to students at BYU," Elfarra said.

The David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies sponsors the International Forum Series every Wednesday at 12 p.m.

Block of Starr report ends on BYU Internet

By JAY HOWSER
jay@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The Kenneth Starr report will be easier to access through BYU computers this week than it was last week.

Sherilyn Olsen, proxymaster at byu.edu, said many students complained that access had been blocked through certain news channels over the weekend.

The report could not be accessed on campus through agencies such as ABC, the Los Angeles Times and the Washington Post, but it could be accessed through many other news sites.

"The block was most likely because of the strong sexual content of the report," Olsen said.

BYU hires the company Webtrack to screen material being accessed by computers at BYU. The university uses this service to help ensure that inappropriate material is not being accessed by university computers.

Webtrack blocks certain sites based on key words and phrases and then reviews the sites to see if they, in fact, should have been blocked.

Olsen reviews any blocked sites which should not have been blocked and reactivates them.

"Webtrack made a mistake in blocking the report, and they are trying to fix it," Olsen said.

Books made according to ancient bookmaking traditions are displayed in the Westward Bound bookmaking exhibit. The art of bookmaking focuses on a book's appearance rather than literary content.

"In the 1900s there was a reintroduction of books as an art form," Barrios said.

The art of bookmaking involves several different elements, Barrios said. It can involve the decoration of the cover, the making of the paper and the binding of the book.

Madelyn Garret, a rare-book curator of special collections in the Marriott Library at the University of Utah, is the curator of the Westward Bound exhibit.

"We have been working very hard on this program," Garret said.

Westward Bound first opened June 5 at the Finch Lane Gallery in Salt Lake. The exhibit then came to Museum of Art at BYU Aug. 7 and will run through Nov. 12, said Paul Anderson, head of design and production at the Museum of Art.

The band could be compared to bands such as Everclear or Urge Overkill. Blue Flannel is creative with its use of instruments. The kazoo and xylophone are rarely used by bands but are detectable on this album.

With songs like "Having a Bad Day," "Go Away," and "Kill Me," almost every song on the album has a negative edge talking about depressing topics or being a little harsh. Other lyrics in a few of the lighter songs were quite humorous. As a whole, the group has talent, but its songs don't seem to reflect that as well as they could.

Music Review

MCA records has just released the newest album from Dance Hall Crashers, titled "Blue Plate Special."

The vocals of Elyse Rogers and Karina Denike are wonderfully harmonized. Their sound is comparable to a cleaner sounding No Doubt. It is a mix between ska and soft punk.

Each song starts strong, but when the vocals begin, the band plays the same chords throughout the rest of the song. After awhile, the songs of "Blue Plate Special" also start to sound the same.

The album consists of only six songs. It is good music to dance to and the concert would be fun, but the CD isn't long enough or diverse enough to grab attention.

Alpine, or BUS!

An Alpine Elementary School student waits to ride the bus home from school on Tuesday. But the free rides won't last long.
Soon, students will have to walk up to a mile and a half on sidewalk-less rural streets and through three major intersections to get to school.
The Alpine School District has decided to not bus pupils any longer.
Alpine parents are angry and have fought to save the school busing.

Bill tough on debtors

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate overwhelmingly passed major legislation Wednesday to overhaul the bankruptcy laws and make it harder for people to sweep away their debts.

The vote on the compromise measure was 97-1, with Sen. Paul Wellstone, D-Minn., the only one to oppose it and Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio and Sen. John Warner, R-Va., not voting.

With credit card companies pushing for drastic changes, a more stringent bill passed the House in June on a 306-118 vote.

The Clinton administration supports some changes in bankruptcy laws but has said it cannot support the House-passed bill in its current form.

But with only a few weeks remaining in the session, lawmakers faced a daunting task of reconciling the two versions and sending a bill to President Clinton.

Lawmakers are alarmed by a rising tide of personal bankruptcies amid a strong economy.

But several senators insisted that the credit card companies, which aggressively solicit customers, share some of the blame for mounting consumer debt.

Unpaid credit card debt is now estimated at $40 billion, and companies say they are being forced to charge higher interest rates that hurt consumers who handle credit responsibly.

"One wonders about the good faith of the credit card companies," Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., said before the vote. "Responsibility is a two-way street."

In drafting the bill in consultation with White House negotiators, senators included some provisions designed to protect consumers.

Credit card companies, for example, would be barred from dropping consumers who pay on time or charging them higher interest rates.

Senate passage of the bankruptcy legislation came a day after senators defeated a proposal to raise the federal minimum wage by $1 an hour — an action viewed by opponents as another blow to Americans struggling to get by.

Democratic supporters of boosting the minimum wage vowed after their defeat to campaign hard on the issue between now and the November elections.

The measure, rejected by a 55-44 vote, would have raised the minimum wage earned by some 12 million Americans to $6.15 an hour on Jan. 1, 2000. The first 50-cent increase would have taken effect Jan. 1, 1999.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., chief backer of an increase, said the vote showed that the Republicans were in the sway of business interests. He predicted that for Democrats, the minimum wage increase "will be a central issue in the course of this campaign."

Despite the strong economy, the number of Americans filing personal bankruptcies last year jumped to 1.3 million — up more than 300 percent since 1980.

Both the House and Senate versions would make it more difficult for people to simply file court papers and erase their bills. The House measure would introduce a "means" test for people filing for bankruptcy court protection from creditors.

Gov't grants $1.9 million to UT jr. highs

Utah lawmakers, hoping to make the transition from elementary school to middle school easier, allotted $9 million to reduce class size by lowering the student-to-teacher ratio.

"What they're trying to do is help middle school critters get through those years a little less scathed," said Vicky Dahn, coordinator of curriculum and instruction at the State Office of Education.

The money is part of Gov. Mike Leavitt's education initiative and is divided according to the average daily enrollment of students in seventh and eighth grades in each school district. Granite, the state's largest school district, received the most — $1.4 million — while Daggett, the smallest, received a little more than $5,000.

Other public schools have received funding to lower class size in the past, said Lynn Smith, business administrator for the Provo City School District.

"Over the last several years we've had money for class reduction in lower grades," Smith said. "Now (lawmakers) have reached the seventh and eighth grades."

Nebo School District has directed its funds to certain academic subjects.

"We tried to focus on math, science and in some cases language arts and social studies," said Bob Wadley, director of secondary education for Nebo School District.

After the money was divided among the school districts, it was divided among each individual school.

"Each school made its own plan on how to get the most out of that money," Wadley said. All of the $353,900 given to Nebo School District was used to hire 12 new teachers and interns.

Provo City School District received more than $232,000 and Alpine received more than $819,000.

Before the season started, Howard said the younger players' ability to step up would determine the team's success or failure. Gibby and freshman Carrie Summerhays are joined at the tournament by fellow freshman Jessica Gardner and sophomore Summer Fenstermaker. Senior Jamie Stevenson anchors the team.

In all, six of eight golfers on the team are underclassmen and four are freshmen. Howard said this is unusual and they will make mistakes, but the players are eager to play.

Assistant coach Sue Nyhus said this will be another tournament where they are looking for a "steady eddy" to step up.

A BYU rugby player slips underneath his Utah State opponent for the ball. BYU's next game is against Utah State on Oct. 10 in Logan.

BYU rugby steamrolls its foes year after year

By ADAM MANGUM
mangum@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

A rough, hitting sport. A nationally-ranked BYU team. An odd-shaped ball that is kicked through uprights. And they play games on Helaman Fields.

Confused? It's the BYU rugby team. It practices and plays games at Helaman Field right next to the track. Practices are every Tuesday and Thursday at 4 p.m., consisting of running, scrimmaging and skill training. The skill training is key because half the team started playing rugby here at BYU.

Assistant coach Mark Ormsby from New Zealand said that the nature of rugby helps the new guys pick up the game quickly.

"Rugby is a simple game, an ad-lib game. You have to be really creative on the field," Ormsby said.

The hardest skill for Americans to learn when picking up the sport is the lateral throw, he said. This motion is completely foreign to athletes who grew up throwing baseballs and footballs overhand.

Despite the inexperience of many of its players, the BYU rugby team is consistently one of the best in the nation. The team was started in 1967 by John Segger. Segger's son Shane is the team's publicist and estimates that the team has finished in the top ten 25 times over its 30-year existence.

The team played on Haws Field for more than 20 years before being moved next to the track. The team would like to move back to Haws so it could charge for the games. Rugby is a club sport, so the additional revenue would be a big help, Segger said.

One of the reasons for the team's continued success is having a solid core of experienced rugby players to fill the skill positions. One such player is senior David Wheeler who played rugby while attending school in England. After trying to play football for BYU for two years, he returned to rugby, the sport he felt more comfortable with. Now he is one of the experienced players who brings success to the Cougars.

"We have a group of guys who've played a long time," he said.

The Rugby team started off its league season in typical fashion, blasting Weber St. 74-10 last Saturday in Ogden. The team is ranked No. 3 in the Pacific Region, behind Cal-Berkeley and Stanford. Next semester during the non-league season, the Cougars will play both teams.

The team's next game is against Utah State on Oct. 10 in Logan. It will then be at home for three straight games against Boise State, Idaho State and the University of Utah, its biggest league rival. The home games will be held at Helaman Fields on Oct. 17, 24 and 31. Games usually start around 12 p.m.

Pre-fight conditioning: Tyson must see shrink

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson is searching for a ranked opponent and a doctor. The doctor comes first.

Nevada boxing authorities have given the former heavyweight champion a list of three facilities where he must undergo a psychiatric examination. They also have set a deadline of Monday for the doctors to submit reports on Tyson's mental state.

If Tyson is cleared by the doctors, the Nevada Athletic Commission is expected to give the former heavyweight champion a new boxing license on Oct. 3.

"No one wants to go see doctors, but he's eager to get his license back," Shelly Finkel, Tyson's adviser, said Tuesday.

Tyson gets his choice of being examined at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston or C.F. Menninger Memorial Hospital in Topeka, Kan.

The examination was ordered by the commission following Saturday's six-hour hearing on Tyson's request for reinstatement. He has been banned since the commission revoked his license July 9, 1997, for biting Evander Holyfield's ears.

A letter sent to Tyson and his advisers Monday from the commission said the team of doctors evaluating him must include a psychologist, a psychiatrist and a neuropsychologist. The boxer must be given comprehensive neuropsychological testing as well as an MRI of the brain and a complete drug screen.

The commission wants the doctors who evaluate Tyson to look at videotape of his fight against Holyfield as well as from post-fight interviews and license reinstatement hearings in New Jersey and Nevada.

Finkel said he was trying to find out which of the three facilities do all the testing required by the commission and whether he could get three doctors to come to Las Vegas on Oct. 3 to be questioned by the commission.

The Mayo Clinic, he said, apparently doesn't do all the testing requested by the commission.

If he regains his license, Tyson's first foe will be a fighter who is ranked. In his first comeback fight after being released from prison in 1995, Tyson knocked out Peter McNeeley in the first round. Both Tyson and Finkel are looking for a stronger opponent this time.

"You want credibility in the person he fights," Finkel said. "We're looking for a rated opponent."

If Tyson is allowed to return to the ring, he is expected to fight in late November or early December, most likely at the MGM Grand hotel-casino in Las Vegas.

osa watches No. 65 sail into history y at Milwaukee County Stadium. Sosa pair of homers against the Milwaukee Brewers, his favorite pitching staff. The two homers gave Sosa 65 on the year and tied him with Mark McGwire for the major league lead.

Griffey joins Gehrig, Ruth for historical RBI record

Associated Press

SEATTLE — Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig and now Ken Griffey Jr.

With 54th and 55th home runs of the season, Griffey joined Ruth and Gehrig as the only players to drive in 140 or more runs in three consecutive seasons.

Asked about the milestones he has reached this season, Griffey just shrugged.

"I just try and stay consistent and do what I love to do," he said after leading the Seattle Mariners to a 7-6 victory over the Oakland Athletics Tuesday night.

Besides Griffey, teammate Alex Rodriguez, Juan Gonzalez of the Texas Rangers, Manny Ramirez of the Cleveland Indians and Albert Belle of the Chicago White Sox are having banner years in the American League.

"There's a lot going on," Griffey said. "I'm glad I don't have to vote for the MVP."

Griffey became the 13th unanimous choice for MVP when he won it in 1997 with 56 home runs and 147 RBI.

"It's a shame we're not in the pennant race because (Griffey and Rodriguez) would garner some MVP votes," Mariners manager Lou Pinella said.

On Sept. 7, Griffey reached the 50 home run mark for the second straight year, becoming just the third player to do it. Mark McGwire and Babe Ruth are the others. Griffey's current home run total is third in the majors to McGwire's and Sammy Sosa's 65.

tied up: Sosa slugs two ssociated Press

KEE — A day after he home run race, Sammy ack.

e runs Nos. 64 and 65 on ying Mark McGwire for nd breaking an 0-for-21 Chicago Cubs' 8-7 loss ukee Brewers.

hals faced Houston on ight in St. Louis, where s hit a Busch Stadium e runs this season.

slugger, picking on his ching staff, homered vaukee in the fifth and giving him 12 against his season.

65 gave him 11 multi- this season, tying the record set by Detroit's erg in 1938.

solo shot to right field in the fifth off rookie afael Roque, who also wire's 64th homer. With sixth, he hit a 2-2 fast- to straightaway center right-hander Rod Henderson.

There was no mad scramble for the record-tying ball — it bounced off the bleachers and back onto the grass, where center fielder Marquis Grissom retrieved it and tossed it to the infield. Shortstop Mark Loretta then rolled it to Sosa in front of the Cubs' dugout.

Both times, Sosa took a quick curtain call to chants of "Sam-my! Sam-my!"

Mired in his worst slump of the season, Sosa said he was concerned only about getting the Cubs to the playoffs, while all McGwire had to worry about was swinging for the fences because the Cards were out of the race.

"He's the one going to finish up there a little bit higher than me," Sosa said Tuesday. "You have to remember, my situation is different. I have to go out there and try to win the last five games."

Plus, "He's swinging much better than me," Sosa explained.

Sosa had not gotten a hit and had struck out eight times since hitting a grand slam last Wednesday in San Diego for No. 63.

He walked his first two times up against Roque, then sent a 1-0 fastball 344 feet to the opposite field, giving the Cubs a 4-0 lead. His second homer made it 7-0, but the Cubs couldn't hold the lead.

Sosa's 12 home runs against the Brewers are the most by a player against one team since Roger Maris connected 13 times off the Chicago White Sox in 1961, the year he hit 61 homers.

Sosa's slump-buster came on the same day his native Dominican Republic began recovery from Hurricane Georges, which set off looting and street violence. Seventeen people died and much of the country lost power.

Most of Sosa's immediate family members were in Chicago, where they had gathered for the "Sammy Sosa Celebration" last weekend, but the slugger was concerned about many relatives and friends back home.

On Tuesday night, Sosa admitted he was struggling at the plate but promised his swing would return. The Brewers again cooperated.

denied restraining order

ociated Press

— A judge has denied request for a restrain- inst the former girl- ccused the White Sox ng her. Belle contends s been harassing him tephanie Bugusky, 24, lsip, called him more between 2:20 a.m. and Sept. 5, a day after a a court order protect- e outfielder.

ty Judge LaBrenda ded that order until urt date on Sept. 29.

ntends Belle punched ked her down at her July 20 and ripped her of the wall when she help.

ged with domestic bat- amage to property and a report of domestic arges are Class A mis- h penalties of up to a a $2,500 fine for each

Bugusky was arrested Sept. 10 and charged with telephone harassment, a misdemeanor carrying a possible sentence of up to six months in jail, said Pam Paziotopoulos, a supervisor in the Cook County state's attorney's office.

On Monday, during a hearing in Belle's criminal case, White refused to grant a temporary restraining order that would prevent Bugusky from contacting Belle.

Orem rehab house delayed in tie vote

By PETER CARR
carr@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

After a long and emotional public debate Tuesday night, the Orem City Council remained in gridlock over the issue of granting a zoning permit for a youth rehabilitation home.

A Pleasant Grove company, 4 the Youth, is seeking a conditional-use permit to build a rehabilitation center for juvenile delinquents who are in a transitory state between foster care and incarceration.

The Tuesday vote resulted in a 3-3 tie. Council member Michael Thompson was unable to break that tie after excusing himself from participating in the decision early in the meeting.

Residents called for Thompson to excuse himself since he works with Steve Astle, 4 the Youth group operator, in his calling in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Thompson, after describing why his relationship with Astle is not a conflict of interest, excused himself on principle.

Nearly 100 residents came in protest of the group home arguing that it would be a hazard to public safety.

"We're not a bad neighborhood," said resident Ken Parkinson. "We're working together because this is not appropriate for this particular neighborhood."

Residents are concerned that the home will be a blight to their neighborhood and fear they will become the target of criminal acts. The home would be built near a trailer park where many elderly people live. Residents fear for their safety.

"A trailer park is a petty theft paradise," Parkinson said. "How easy is it to break into one of these homes?"

City Attorney Paul Johnson advised the council that denying the permit on fear of safety and prejudice would be exclusionary zoning.

Patty Palmer, a former bus driver of youth groups, does not agree.

"If the safety of Orem is not an issue, then what on earth is?" she said.

Fatalities climbing as hurricane keeps raging

Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Hurricane Georges brought its violent winds and rains to Haiti on Wednesday, unleashing flash floods and killing at least 11 people in this poor Caribbean country.

As Georges marched relentlessly to the northwest, a hurricane watch was posted for south Florida. As many as 100,000 people in the Florida Keys were ordered to leave for the mainland.

Heavy rains soaked Cuba's southeastern coast, and civil defense officials evacuated 167,000 people from flood-prone areas in the eastern provinces, Cuban news reports said.

The hurricane's unofficial death toll was 37, including 17 in the Dominican Republic, where Georges set off looting and street violence. Two of the dead were looters shot by police.

Four people died in Puerto Rico, where the government's insurance commissioner, Juan Garcia, estimated damages at $1 billion.

In the capital of the Dominican Republic, looters waded waist-deep in water, balancing televisions and air conditioners on their heads even as 110 mph winds toppled trees and crushed houses. Bands of youths with machetes and pistols roamed the streets, many of them drunk.

Haiti's Radio Metropole reported that nine people were killed when floodwaters wrecked two houses in a Port-au-Prince neighborhood. Deaths also were reported in Gonaives and the northern town of Marmelade, though details weren't immediately available.

Army general accused of misconduct

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Army has decided to move ahead in its case against a former two-star general who has been accused of adultery and other misconduct.

In a statement released at the Pentagon Wednesday, the Army said the case will be handed over to Army Gen. Thomas Schwartz, who serves as the head of U.S. Forces Command in Fort McPherson, Ga.

Hale retired in February after serving four months as inspector general. Several investigations were launched after questions about his conduct appeared in published reports shortly thereafter.

It will be up to Schwartz to decide whether to punish Hale through administrative actions, or whether he should call for a formal court martial. Schwartz could also refer the case to a subordinate, who would have the same options.

Children of the Boys and Girls Club play with a K-9 dog at an activity hosted in conjunction with the Utah County Sheriff Offices' DARE program.

By STEPHEN SMITH
stephen@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The Boys and Girls Club, Utah County Chapter and the Utah County Sherriff's department commemorated the beginning of a joint-venture prevention and intervention program Wednesday afternoon at the Boys and Girls Clubhouse building in Provo.

About 100 people, including children, teen-agers, volunteers, Sherriff deputies and a hand-full of college athletes attended Wednesday's activities.

The prevention and intervention program is designed to educate the members of the club on the dangers and risks of drugs, alcohol and teen pregnancy, according to a Boys and Girls Club news release. The Sherriff's office will work hand-in-hand with the club to promote the message.

This program will be every other Wednesday and will run in conjunction with existing recreation and education programs that the club conducts daily.

Deputy Nolan Smith of the Sherriff's office said interaction with the youth teaches them that the police are here to help and that crime is not just a police problem.

"Community safety is everyone's business," Smith said.

One of the five K-9 units of the Sherriff's office was also present Wednesday. Each unit consists of a handler and a dog, said Deputy Sean Davis of Spanish Fork. Davis, the handler of Acho, the visting canine, said that visits by K-9 units to organizations such as these leaves a "positive impression with kids."

"The dogs are by far more popular than the deputies," Davis said.

The Boys and Girls Club is open to all youth between ages 10 and 14, said Shanni Call, program director of the club.

Call added that most youth get into trouble between the hours of 3 to 6 p.m. The club offers activities between these hours [illegible] order to offer the youth [illegible] munity an alternative [illegible] These activities are not [illegible] ational but educational a[illegible]

Mayor uses night to talk to residents

By JON FISCHER
fish@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Instead of talking to answering machines or secretaries, Provo residents had the chance to speak face-to-face with the mayor Wednesday night.

All residents of Provo were invited to address their concerns, questions and comments at Mayor Lewis Billings and all of the city department heads at Mayor's Night-Out at Westridge Elementary School.

Provo has a Mayor's Night every month. One month it is a Mayor's Night-Out conducted at different neighborhoods, and the next month is a Mayor's Night-In at city hall.

Mayor Billings started the informal monthly meetings in March to help residents have a chance to meet and converse with their city government.

"It's an opportunity for people to come and interact with the people who are responsible for every facet of the city government," Billings said.

Each city department has a booth where its respective director personally speaks with residents.

Mary DeLaMare-Schaefer, director of community relations for Provo, said residents can easily reach every department if they need to address their problems.

"If it's a complicated problem that involves a number of departments, we can just gather them all together that night and talk about it," DeLaMare-Schaefer said.

> "It's an opportunity for people to come and interact with the people who are responsible for every facet of the city government."
> —Lewis Billings
> Provo Mayor

"It's our goal to be here for whoever needs help," she said.

"When they come, some people don't know which department to talk to, so ... we can direct them to the department that would be most helpful," DeLaMare-Schaefer said.

The Mayor's Night is designed so residents can talk in a non-threatening atmosphere without having to worry about being on television.

According to DeLaMare, Mayor's Night-Out is done in different neighborhoods every other month "so we can have it close to home, in a convenient place where people are comfortable going."

Mayor Billings says Mayor's Night has been beneficial to residents.
